Your answer: I recognize myself most in the Analyst role, because I like to carefully examine situations, weigh options, and make logical decisions before acting. My strength is in structured thinking and problem-solving.

My second preferred role would be the Expert, as I enjoy building knowledge in areas I am passionate about, and I often rely on expertise to contribute to the team.

My third preferred role would be the Chairperson, since I like to ensure that discussions are fair, everyone has a voice, and decisions are made clearly. I believe these three roles together reflect both my critical thinking skills and my ability to support and guide a team.

On the basis of the general descriptions you identified your preferred team role (question 1). Does the result of the test support your initial hunch? Elaborate please

Your answer: Yes, the test supports my initial hunch. I chose Analyst as my first preference, and the test also placed Analyst as one of my strongest roles (14%). The balance between Analyst, Expert, and Chairperson in my test results confirms that I combine logical thinking, specialized knowledge, and leadership qualities.

Do you agree with the outcome, do you recognize yourself in the outcome of the test? If you do not agree with the result of this test, explain here:

1. Why you do not agree

2. Analyze what could have happened, what could have 'gone wrong'

Your answer: I agree with the outcome of the test. I often find myself analyzing situations and offering structured solutions, which matches the Analyst role. At the same time, I also value knowledge and clear leadership, so Expert and Chairperson feel accurate as well.

Meet with your team and discuss the outcome of your, and their test. Is a reshuffle of tasks/positions needed? Why? Why not?

Your answer: After discussing the results with my team, we saw that most of us had different strong roles, which gave us a good balance. Because of this, we did not feel a reshuffle of tasks was necessary. Each person can contribute in their strongest area. However, we agreed to stay flexible and help each other if a project requires different roles.
